- Worker filings for unemployment benefits rose last week but remained historically low. Initial jobless claims increased by 13,000 to a seasonally adjusted 196,000 the Labor Department said Thursday. Continuing claims for those already receiving benefits rose 38,000 to 1.69 million.
- The Labor Department's annual CPI revisions showed that the index rose 0.1% in December rather than dipping 0.1%, as reported last month. Data for November was also revised higher to show CPI increasing 0.2% instead of 0.1% as previously reported. January CPI will be reported on Tuesday.
- Consumer sentiment rose to a 13-month high of 66.4 in early February, up from 64.9 in January, according to the University of Michigan. It was the third straight gain but remains well below its pre-pandemic high of 101.
